AT THE
OFFICE OF THE "DAILY PRESS."
PART FIRST OF A NEW
ANGLO-CHINESE DICTIONARY, QUARTO
BY THE
REV. W. LOBSCHEID
WITH PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION.

THIS WORK was commenced in November, 1864, and will be completed towards the end of 1868, comprising in all 2,000 large quarto pages. The second part will be out in June, next, the third in April next, and the fourth about December, 1868. Much care has been bestowed on the work to render it useful, both to the Merchant and to the Student of the Chinese and English languages. Articles of Trade, Objects of Natural History, all the articles to be obtained in the Chinese Market are given with their Chinese equivalents.

THE price of the book complete will be $30, and it will be published in four parts at $7.50 each. But this objection presents itself to the sale of the parts separately, should the purchaser of one or more parts not take the others, a number of incomplete, and consequently valueless, copies will be left on the publisher's hands To remedy this objection, it is hoped that those who see fit to patronize the undertaking by purchasing the first part, will not object to signing an arrangement to take the remaining parts as they appear, or should they prefer it, to pay for the entire work in advance.

The work is offered in boards. The best Bookbinding Establishment in China being connected with this Office, parties desirous of having their copies strongly or elegantly bound will please to intimate the same.

Missionaries supplied at Trade Price.

HONGKONG, JULY 9, 1867.

To judge from such insane proceedings as the purchase of silk at Shanghai at a rate actually above the London value, it would seem that China merchants need a still severer course of training than that which they have passed through during the past twelve months. In connection with the loss of £100,000 by the MARQUIS of Hastings on the Derby, we read somewhere that it was "a good lesson" for him. Perhaps £100,000 is a long price to pay for any lesson which is to teach a man to be careful of his money, and in the same way the price which the commerce of China has paid for the lessons it has had up to the present time, whatever had been learned, would have been excessive, but the wonderful part of the matter seems to be that in spite of the enormous expenses to which China merchants have gone for instruction in prudence, they have not even learned the lesson properly after all. The tea investments, though not quite so mad as last year, have been, looking at them by the light of ordinary mercantile rules, rash and dangerous in the highest degree. That they can lead to any great success is, we suppose, practically impossible, and if they turn out so far successful as to save the speculators from loss, that in a great many cases no doubt will be as much as can reasonably be expected. Meanwhile, not content with risking their very existence as mercantile men by standing to win or lose on tea with the chances two or three to one against them, some China merchants seem determined to guard against the possibility of success by sinking money in another investment with the chances equally unfavourable. Tea of course may succeed this year, as any given number may come out in a lottery, and silk bought in Shanghai about the London price may succeed in the same way, but that a merchant who goes into tea and silk both, on such terms as we have seen, should avoid loss on the result of the two transactions, is about as likely as that two given numbers should come out in two different lotteries.

The most melancholy reflection is that such recklessness seems like desperation—seems the imprudence of men who are too far gone to be saved by prudence—who think they have very little chance of life on any terms, and may as well go for a million as for a lakh, if they are to go in any case. The frightful immorality, however, of trying to bolster up a failing business by speculation in the face of adverse odds, cannot be denounced too severely. It is not alone the enlarged circle of creditors who suffer when the crash comes; the whole mercantile community has been suffering meanwhile from the bad effect which such speculation has upon markets. This would be the case anywhere, but it is more particularly the case in China, where the ideas of native dealers in produce are very easily raised, but very difficult to depress. The laws of political economy, indeed, seem at the first glance to be suspended in China, the prices of goods by no means representing a balance between the necessity of the seller to realise, and the necessity of the buyer to invest. Looking at the matter without reference to facts, that is, assuming ignorance of the course of commercial events in China, and supposing that by a priori reasoning one were endeavouring to discover what the course of a trade between foreigners in China and native producers would be like, one would certainly be inclined to argue in this way. The native producer for export must dispose of his crop; the foreigner being by the premises a man of capital, simply wishes to buy in order to sell again at a profit,—wishes to buy at as low a rate as possible, and is not compelled to buy at all if he does not see his way clearly, as his money will "keep," which the Chinaman's tea and silk will not do nearly so well. Then it follows that the necessity of the seller to realise is very much greater than the necessity of the buyer to invest, therefore that the price of the goods in China, limited on the one hand by the cost of production, and on the other by the price in Europe, will fix itself very much nearer the low than the high limit. The man who can best afford to refrain from making any given bargain, it will be urged, will always have the best of it. Anyone thinking thus over the conditions of trade in China would not readily believe how widely the truth differs from the fancy-picture he would have created. "Why," he would say, "such a state of things would contradict the laws of political economy. It cannot exist?" But it does exist, and there is no such thing as contradicting natural laws. What is the explanation?

The laws of political economy are as certain as gravitation, but when people consult them with the view of ascertaining what is likely to ensue under certain commercial conditions, they make one large assumption. They premise that everyone will be governed by a regard for his own interest. It seems a safe assumption stated broadly, but it is astonishing how constantly it breaks down in practice, how, for instance, in buying tea, rivalry between one another will influence buyers quite independently of their own interest. The two great markets of China are in some respects in the nature of auctions. There is exactly the same sort of excited competition amongst buyers which is sometimes seen at auctions, an excitement which supersedes the ordinary desire to secure as good a bargain as possible, and sometimes prompts people to buy a thing they do not want to spite somebody else, or to give more for it than suits their interest, from the same benevolent motive. Until the idea of rivalry can be expunged altogether from the prevalent doctrines of business it is impossible that a healthy tone can be once more restored to the China trade. First, of course, any people of those who are still speculating widely and paying high prices for tea and silk, whose imprudence is due to the recklessness of despair, must fall, doing what mischief to others in their descent they may. Then, when the wreck is cleared away,—and unfortunately the wreck of small firms which have been guiltless, but which have been crushed by the fall of the other firms which have sinned—there will be hope for a new era in which prudence will be possible. In one sense we can understand how prudence may just at present be impossible. When rates for silk and tea are driven up to an absurd level by reckless buyers, no man can buy prudently, the calmest must buy imprudently, or not at all. That is the penalty which all are paying alike for the faults of the few. Still, however, it is better to hang back and do nothing, than merely for the sake of occupation, to hurry along the road to ruin.

The intended departure yesterday morning of the Leven on her expedition to Hainan against pirates was postponed till this morning when she started with her coal junk in tow, and the Bouncer in company.

Charge of Wilful Murder.

Lee-a-see, Lee-a-chow and Lee-a-cheong, three stone-cutters residing in the village of Suey-tsang-wan, a short distance beyond Sow-ke-wan, were brought to the Central Station early this morning by Inspector Anningson, charged with the wilful murder of Ho-lun-shing, another stone-cutter, residing in the same village at seven o'clock last night. The principal evidence against the prisoners is that of a fisherman who states that he was sitting by the deceased when the three men came up and attacked him with stone-cutter's chisels. The third prisoner was the first to strike him after which the other two set on and injured the man to such an extent that he died about an hour after the attack. Some domestic squabble is said to be the cause of this horrible affair.

The Hongkong, Canton, and Macao Steamboat Company.

An extraordinary meeting of the shareholders of this company was held yesterday at the offices of the general agents, Messrs. A. Heard & Co.

Captain ENDICOTT took the chair, and read the advertisement by which the meeting was called.

Mr. GEORGE HEARD then moved that all the words in clause 85 of the articles of association after the word shares should be omitted. The clause stood on the articles as follows:—"No person shall be eligible to the office of director, unless he be the holder of at least fifty shares, and shall have held shares at least three months, next preceeding the day of election.

Mr. J. S. LAPRAIK seconded the motion.

Dr. MURRAY thought it would be preferable to make special exceptions when necessary rather than to alter the articles of association. He believed he knew the motive with which the proposal was now made, and he sympathised with it, but still he thought it would be better not to throw over altogether a regulation which had been deliberately adopted at the constitution of the company.

Mr. POLLARD said the clause had been put in on the formation of the company to narrow the body from which it would be possible to elect directors. Now, however, that necessity no longer existed, and as the shares were passing continually it might happen, as indeed was the case at the present moment, that there was no one otherwise eligible as a new director who was properly qualified under the clause as it stood. He did not see any valid objections to the course proposed. After a man might be registered as a transferee he would still have to pass the ordeal of a shareholders' meeting, or if the board made him a director he would only remain such until the next meeting of shareholders. Very few persons would be qualified to act if this vote were not passed. Some large shareholders were away, others held offices under the company.

Dr. MURRAY thought that if they did what was proposed, they would do away with one of the principal safeguards preventing combination. It would be much more difficult to put back than to expunge such a clause. There might be some special object agitated and some gentleman might buy shares a day or two before a meeting for the purpose of being elected a director. If the shareholders had power to say on each occasion that exceptions should be made, that would answer the end in view. He would therefore put an amendment embodying his views.

Mr. POLLARD (while Dr. Murray was writing his amendment) called his attention to the necessity of framing his amendment so as to bring it within that which it was competent for the meeting to do under article 58 (relating to extraordinary meetings) and the advertisement by which the present meeting had been called.

Mr. CALEB SMITH—(after some conversation on this point) asked Mr. Pollard what course could be adopted.

Mr. POLLARD then drew up the following amendment—"That after the word election [that is to say, at the end of clause 85] be added the words, unless by the unanimous vote of the shareholders present at any ordinary general meeting voting for the election of directors, any shareholder who may hold the requisite number of shares, but has not held them for the specified period, be specially elected as a director."

This form of words was accepted by Dr. Murray and seconded by Mr. Kresser, whereupon Mr. Heard withdrew his motion in its favor, and it was put as a substantive motion. It was carried unanimously, and Mr Pollard remarked that the meeting was pretty much where it would have been had the original motion been carried instead.

The meeting was then resolved into an ordinary half-yearly meeting.

The CHAIRMAN read the advertisement by which it was called together, and also the report which has already appeared in these columns.

Mr. SASSOON said that as he was intending to leave the colony he would not wish to be re-elected as auditor.

The report was altered in accordance with this intimation and adopted. Six retiring directors, Messrs. Endicott, Petitt, Deacon, Qu-k-a-cheong, Lapraik, and Heard were then re-elected, and the Viscount do Cercal was elected, directors. On the motion of Mr. Pollard, and in accordance with the altered article of association, Mr. E. A. Hitchcock and Mr. E. Cunningham were also elected directors. As no gentleman could be brought forward at the moment to take Mr. Sassoon's place as auditor, both Mr. Riddell and himself were re-elected.

Mr. POLLARD then said there was one matter to which he wished to call attention, and this was the expediency of discontinuing the system of free passes. He would propose to make an exception in favor of missionaries and all persons, in fact, who were ministering members of any religious denomination, but with that exception he thought all free passes ought to be cancelled, although in some cases it might be proper for the directors to grant a season or a life ticket to particular people from whom the company had received valuable help. He thought it would be enough for the meeting to express an opinion on the subject for the guidance of the directors without passing any definite resolution. He understood it would make a difference of as much as $3,000 a year to the company if the free pass system were abolished, although it would not matter much to individuals.

Mr. WELLER said he had known the Canton boat come down with eight passengers, five of them free, all consuls (a laugh).

On the expression of a wish to that effect, Mr. Pollard put his remarks in the form of a resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Vaucher and carried unanimously.

Mr. MARGESSON suggested that as there were two steamers now lying idle, one might be laid on to run from Hongkong to Canton viâ Macao returning by the same route. He thought the Fire Dart would be a suitable vessel for making the attempt, and he believed a considerable traffic would be created by the facility thus offered.

Mr. HEARD said the company had attempted to run the Fire Dart between Macao and Canton last year for a couple of months, but she lost $1500 a month. Her gross receipts for the first month were $7892 and her expenses $8567, without reckoning the cost of insurance, which brought up the loss to the amount he had named. Any passengers which under the system proposed would be carried between Hongkong and Macao, would simply be taken away from the White Cloud. He explained also, that the insurance on each boat was $750 to $800 a month, which was saved when she was lying in harbor, as the company's boats were only insured when they were running.

Mr. MARGESSON left what he had said as a simple suggestion for the consideration of the board.

Dr. MURRAY then proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, and the meeting broke up.

Police Intelligence, July 8th.

BEFORE C. C. SMITH, ESQ.

Thirty-six cases in all were disposed of to-day by the two magistrates, but most of them of a very trivial character, and the whole proceedings were finished shortly after noon.

A seaman belonging to the French ship Carmeline, was fined $2 and ordered to pay $10 amends to a prostitute whom he had assaulted and knocked out one of her teeth.

ANOTHER YOUNG RASCAL.

Wong-a-fat, an urchin sixteen years of age, was charged with picking the pocket of a French seaman, belonging to M. I. steamer Labourdonais.

Jacques Riquet stated that yesterday afternoon while walking in the market with two companions, he felt some-one touching his pocket, and on turning sharply round, saw the prisoner withdraw his hand from the pocket, and two or three dollars fell to the ground. He ran after the boy, who made off as fast as he could, and finding he could not catch him, knocked him down with a stick, when five dollars, and a half fell from his hand.

A companion of complainant's substantiated this statement, and prisoner, who could only advance that there was a great crowd about at the time and complainant must be mistaken, was sentenced to two months' imprisonment and two floggings of ten strokes each.

LARCENY BY DOMESTIC SERVANTS.

Lee-a-lun, Kwok-a-kow, servants, Lee-a-ng, amah to Mr. Charles Collins, residing in Chancery-lane, and Kwic-a-quan, amah to Mr. John Collins, living in the same tenement, were charged on suspicion of stealing the sum of five dollars in silver, two umbrellas, and one musical box from their master's dwelling.

Mr. Charles Collins stated that on Friday evening last he missed $5 from a waistcoat pocket which had been left in his room. He enquired from the first three prisoners if any of them had been to his room, which they all denied. He then went to business, intending to discharge the prisoners. On his return, however, he missed two umbrellas, a musical-box, and some other articles. He went to the police station, and from there proceeded to search the pawn-broker's shops, in one of which he found the umbrella produced, which he recognised as his property. He then gave the three prisoners in charge, and afterwards the fourth in consequence of a communication made to him. The pawnbroker accompanied him back to the house, but failed to recognise any of the prisoners as the person who had pawned the umbrella.

Chun-ayow, amah to Mr. Henry Collins, also residing in the same house had heard the four prisoners qurrelling on Friday night last, when the fourth threatened the other three that she would put them in gaol, but she did not say what for.

His Worship adjourned the case to Thursday next, the 11th instant, in order to obtain a little more evidence on the case.

BEFORE E. W. GOODLAKE, ESQ.

CRUELTY TO A HORSE.

Yip-asop, horse coolie, was charged with wilfully injuring a horse the property of Lieut.-Col. Burne, 73rd Regiment.

Foong-afook, horse coolie to Colonel Burne, stated that yesterday evening, about six o'clock, he heard a noise in his stable, and on going in saw the prisoner there with a rope round the horse's near fetlock, which he was sawing away at and had succeeded in working the skin off and leaving the flesh bare and raw. Prisoner had no business whatever in the stable and witness has no idea why he should wish to injure the horse.

A witness was called who corroborated this statement and in spite of prisoner's very probable statement to the effect that Afook wanted to get him out of the situation in order to recommend a relation of his to the place, he was committed to gaol for two months with hard labour, and ordered to receive twenty lashes on the spot where the offence was committed, his Worship remarking that this was a most cruel case and he was quite at a loss to understand the object of prisoner's brutality.

A JUVENILE SCOUNDREL AGAIN.

Ng-achow, a small boy, sixteen years old, describing himself as a coolie, was charged with snatching a silk umbrella from a smaller boy named Loo-aqui, while walking in Elgin-street on the 6th instant.

It appeared that the little boy was walking along with his uncle and carrying the umbrella in his hand. Prisoner suddenly came up, snatched the umbrella and ran away down the street. The uncle pursued calling out "thief" and prisoner was stopped by a Sikh policeman with the umbrella in his possession.

The constable deposed to the truth of this latter statement, and prisoner was sent to gaol for two months and sentenced to receive two floggings of ten strokes each, which his Worship hoped would deter him from following up this career of crime as he grew older.

Coroner's Inquest.

A preliminary enquiry was opened on Saturday last at the Government Civil Hospital for the purpose of investigating the cause of the death of Charles Fleury, seaman, who expired in the hospital on the morning of the 5th inst. F. Stewart, Esq., Inspector of Government Schools, presided in the absence of J. Simpson, Esq., coroner, and the jury was composed of Messrs. Ladd, Hart, and Hoyes. The jury having viewed the body, evidence was taken as follows:—

Inspector Payne stated that on the night of the 24th June last, he was on charge-room duty, and about ten o'clock prisoner was brought to the station drunk by two chaircoolies, who stated that they had been carrying him about for the last two hours. Witness questioned deceased, who said that he belonged to a French ship, and was going to be paid off from her the following day. On the understanding that he was to be repaid after this event, the inspector paid the chair-coolies, and told deceased to lie down in the charge-room until he should get sober. Presently he became very abusive and noisy, so much so that it was necessary to lock him in one of the cells, where he still behaved very noisily and called continually for water, which was duly supplied, the inspector visiting him hourly in accordance with strict orders to that effect. The last time the inspector gave him water was at half, past two in the morning, when the man threw it in his face. Witness then entered the cell, and asked deceased what was the matter with him. He replied that he had been drinking some of that d—d stuff which is sold on shore here and was mad. He mentioned also the "Hotel des Colonies" as a public-house he had been at. At his own request witness took him out of the cell, put him under the water tap and gave him a good wash. It was then he saw a slight wound in his head. The washing revived him a bit, and he was allowed to lie down in the charge-room again. At eight o'clock, witness asked him if he would not go on board his ship again, but he said he felt too drunk, and would rather go back to the cell and have another sleep. At 9 o'clock witness told the inspector who relieved him that there was a drunken man locked up in one of the cells, and to look after him. Witness did not see any blood about him when first brought to the station, but his shirt was torn and his clothes generally smothered with mud. During the whole night he was continually complaining of the horrible stuff he had been drinking. At 10 o'clock witness saw him put into a chair; he appeared perfectly helpless at that time, and when the top of the chair was removed in order that he might be lifted in he cried out, "Oh! my head, keep the sun off my head."

Inspector Ambrose deposed that on going on duty at ten o'clock on the morning of the 25th ultc. deceased was handed over to him by Inspector Payne, as a man who had been brought in drunk during the night. He had at that time the appearance of a man recovering from the effects of a debauch. In about half an hour witness visited him, and found him vomiting very much, and that he was apparently very ill. Witness accordingly sent him at once to the hospital. There was a little dry blood on his ear. A man with a slight hurt would be kept in the cells, and not sent to hospital.

George Paffé, seaman, at present an inmate of the hospital, said that the day after deceased was admitted he said that he had come here in a Glasgow brig, and the morning he was leaving the vessel a runner named Collins came on board, and asked him to come to his house. Deceased said that he might as well go there as anywhere else if Collins would lend him a dollar. Collins promised the desired loan, and on arriving at the boarding-house deceased asked the boarding master for the dollar which had been promised by the runner Collins. The boarding-master, however, refused the loan, and deceased said he would not stay in the house, but go elsewhere. Upon this the runner, angry that a victim should escape him, struck deceased and blacked his eye. Deceased then took his traps, and went to Mr. Julian's boarding-house. During the day deceased met Collins in the street, and told him that he should pay for the black eye. Collins said nothing, but kept dodging him all day, and in the evening, with another man, followed him round the different grog shops, and when somewhere near the "British Queen" he heard the other man say to Collins, knock the son of a b—down. Immediately Collins struck him, and knocked him down, kicked, and jumped upon him. He was in such pain that he was unable to get up, although he could crawl a little, and at length he was picked up by a policeman, and conveyed to the station. Witness went on to say that deceased appeared perfectly sensible while making this statement, and repeated it in effect several times. A man formerly a patient in the hospital, who went by the name of "Cockney," came to visit deceased while he was ill, and asked who had hurt him. Deceased said it was Collins. Cockney then said that he had heard Collins say down by the boarding-house that he meant to kill deceased and put him out of the way.

Charles Tom, seaman, also an inmate of the hospital, had heard deceased say that Thompson's runner had hurt him. He seemed perfectly sensible when he said this, but afterwards he was not apparently exactly in his right mind.

Dr. Murray stated that deceased was admitted to hospital on the morning of June 25th, and was found to be suffering from a small wound on the left side of the head, his eyes blackened and contused, and he complained of severe pain in the head. On the first and every subsequent occasion of witness visiting him he was very incoherent, and it was impossible to direct his attention to any one subject for any length of time and it appeared impossible to obtain from him an accurate statement of how he came by his injuries. There was evidently very considerable decease of the brain and in spite of the treatment adopted, he died on the morning of the 5th instant. On the afternoon of the same day at a post mortem examination, on removing the skul cap, a large clot of blood was found between the bone and the covering of the brain corresponding to the wound in the scalp and a second clot beneath the covering. On the surface of the brain on the opposite side, considerable inflammation had taken place, the base of the brain was covered with pus, the base of the skull being fractured from ear to ear. Such an amount of injury could not result otherwise than in death, the only surprising part being that deceased survived so long. The wound in the head was not such a one as would be caused by a sharp instrument and it is extremely improbable that such injuries could possibly have been caused by a fall while walking.

The inquiry was here adjourned until Tuesday next, the 9th instant, for the attendance of Collins for whom a subpoena was issued.

The jury were in considerable doubt as to the statement made by deceased to the witness Paffé in consequence of the evidence of Doctor Murray, and it will no doubt require a considerable amount of caution to sift this matter thoroughly. Should deceased be proved to have met his death through the effects of a brutal assault, it is to be hoped that condign punishment will fall on the cowardly ruffian who attacked him.

The "Min" Case.

(From the "Supreme Court & Consular Gazette.")

Upon the evidence, and applying to it certain well-known principles of law, we cannot but agree with the learned Chief Justice in his opinion that the transitus ended at Hongkong, and that the Plaintiffs gave value for the bills of lading; but we fail to see how the jury could have given a verdict in favour of the Plaintiffs, as they practically decided that Messrs. Lyall, Still & Co. were not insolvent at the time of the assignment, or at all events if they were insolvent, that the Plaintiffs fairly and without notice got the assignment.

Mr. Still acknowledged that the firm was insolvent at the time of the assignment. Mr. Maclean says that when asked by the Plaintiff's agents what property the firm possessed besides those enumerated in a certain schedule, which we understand was appended to the assignment, replied vaguely "I have advices of goods coming forward." Was this a satisfactory reply, when the Plaintiffs had taken everything? Did they not know, must they not be assumed to have known, that there were heavy liabilities outstanding, and improbable assets to meet them? Should not the circumstances that transpired have put them upon enquiry as to whether the goods, the bills of lading for which they had taken, had been paid for? The agent for one of the plaintiffs was absent, the agent for the other was not put into the witness box by his Counsel, who contented himself with saying "we don't want him, he knows nothing." How easy it would have been for him to have displayed his ignorance if in fact he knew nothing, and could have given no information of his own knowledge of the state of Lyall, Still & Co.'s affairs. The jury were however entitled to have these two gentlemen before them, and their absence was in itself a more than suspicious circumstance, which the jury would have done well to take into their consideration. The office of a jury is the discovery of truth, and if Counsel in the undoubted exercise of their discretion, decline to furnish them with all the available materials that may tend to assist them in attaining the object in view, it is their duty to reflect upon the reasons why Counsel have withheld them. We conceive that there was abundant evidence to establish Lyall, Still & Co.'s insolvency, and there was sufficient evidence before the Court to have irresistibly led the jury to the conclusion that the Plaintiff's agents, as reasonable men, must have certainly known of such insolvency. It is the policy of our Law to prevent the appropriation of one person's property towards payment of another's debts, and therefore only in cases where the indicia of property such as bills of lading are transferred by endorsement, or otherwise in the ordinary course of business, bona fide and for valuable consideration, and without notice that the transferer had not paid for the same, or is in insolvent circumstances, will such endorsement be held good and defeat the right of the unpaid vendor to stop in transitu; and this is a principle in aid of commerce. It is equally clear, however, that when there is collusion, or a taint of bad faith, such transactions will not be upheld, or be allowed to defeat the rights of innocent parties.

In the case of Gurney v. Behrend, 3 Ellis and Blackburn, p. 637, Campbell, C.J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, said, "Ever since the great case of Lickbarrow v. Mason the law has been considered to be that the bonâ fide transferee for value of a bill of lading, endorsed by the shipper or his consignee, and put into circulation by the authority of the shipper or his consignee, has an absolute title to the goods, freed from the equitable right of the unpaid vendor to stop in transitu, as against a purchaser; and we believe it to be of essential importance to commerce that this law should be upheld."

On the other hand, it has been frequently decided that if the assignee of a bill of lading acts mala fide,—for instance, if he knows that the consignee of the goods is insolvent and that the goods have not been paid for, he will be held to stand in the same situation as the consignee; and the consignor will preserve his right of stoppage. Upon the case as reported, possibly an imperfect report, we cannot but think that had certain questions of fact been put specifically to the jury for their answer in the affirmative or negative, and the effect of these answers been left to the decision of the Judge, the result might have been different. As it is, it is not very easy to see upon what specific grounds the Defendants could base an appeal. The jury have virtually decided first the mixed question of law and fact that the transitus ended in London; secondly, the question of fact that the Plaintiffs gave value for the bills of lading; and, lastly, that at the time of the assignment to them, they had no notice either that the goods had not been paid for, or that Messrs. Lyall, Still & Co. were in a state of insolvency, and also that the facts in connection with the handing over the bills of lading, the dishonor of a series of bills of exchange and other circumstances, were not in themselves facts to fix the Plaintiffs, as reasonable men with such notice. On this ground perhaps the verdict will be considered as against evidence, and on the legal question of the termination of the transitus it may perhaps be held that the jury have made unto themselves a law instead of taking the explanation of the Law as given them by the Lord Chief Justice.

The subject matter of the notion is of the greatest importance, and if the question of the validity of the assignment cannot be impugned in the Bankruptcy of Messrs. Lyall Still, & Co., on the ground of being made after the assumption of distinct acts of bankruptcy or by way of fraudulent preference, we confess we should be glad to see the important questions of Mercantile Law involved in the case, raised by way of appeal to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

Galley Slaves in the Sixteenth Century.

Whether the lot of the prisoners or the galley slaves of France was then the worst must be decided by each one's special taste for suffering. The galley slaves had the apparent advantage of sun and air; but it is doubtful if these were a sufficient set-off to the company and the senseless and racking labour. The first condemnation of criminals to the galleys is to be found in the reign of Charles VII.; and from the middle of the sixteenth to the end of the seventeenth century the number of these vessels in the fleet continued to increase, till Louis XIV. reckoned forty-two galleys completely equipped and armed. The then equipment of three rows or benches of rowers required so large a number of men that it became difficult to supply the demand. In 1522 it had been forbidden to condemn priests to this fearful punishment; but when a greater pressure was put upon the criminal courts to obtain galley slaves, it became necessary to pass a more formal edict, which was done in 1544, which exempted the clergy entirely from that punishment. When Francis I. came to the throne all kinds of offences, heavy and light, were punishable in this way; and later on, Colbert issued orders that criminals should be condemned to the galleys in preference to any other sentence; and even crimes hitherto punished by death now received this sentence instead. It would seem strange to us in these days to find the Home Secretary directing the judges what punishment to inflict; and the strong pressure put on by the executive power produced, as may be imagined, an abundant crop of horrors. One obsequious prison governor wrote to Colbert that he had twenty fine strong galley men ready to start for Toulon as soon as the commissioner should present himself with his chain. "And the sooner the better," he added, "both that they may not begin to get out of condition, and that the prisons may be relieved of the expense." He concludes with a sang froid more effective than pages of explanation: "It is not my fault there are only twenty (galley men), "for one cannot force the judges to pass this particular sentence." Another "obliging" gentleman, the Advocate-General of Toulouse, excused himself with even more consummate politeness: "Considering," he says, "the extreme desire evinced by his Majesty to increase his galley slaves, we ought to be ashamed of ourselves for having served him so ill" as to have condemned only forty-three prisoners to the galleys. The "extreme desire" of the king went so far indeed that, after passing a law which swept up the Paris beggars and what we should call paupers for this wretched invention of cruelty, and still finding a deficit, Louis ordered the purchase of Italian, Russian, Turk, and negro slaves, and a number of war prisoners of all countries. These all passing under the category of slaves, all faith and justice was set aside, and not one of them was freed at the expiration of his sentence; and then it became common to condemn criminals to a minimum of six or ten years' galley service which could be indefinitely prolonged at the discretion of the commandant according to the difficulty of obtaining fresh hands.—The Month.

The Reform Bill.

(From the "Saturday Review.")

Last Saturday was a day of unexpected joy, and had a sweetness of its own never to be forgotten. We woke up and found ourselves free from the compound householder. That irrepressible, insoluble tormentor had disappeared like snow in the river. On the Friday he was flourishing like a green bay tree; on Saturday he was gone, and his place knew him no more. This great work had been achieved by the humblest agency. For weeks Parliament had been puzzling, fighting, and, we fear, cursing over the compound householder. He was utterly hopeless, and his wrongs were such that every remedy only made them worse. All of a sudden there came a happy thought to the member for Newark. "By the by," said Mr. Hodgkinson, "let us abolish him." Every one was charmed. It was a capital idea. Here was the very bore of bores, the Sphinx whose riddle no one could guess, the teterrima causa of Parliamentary war; and Parliament was suddenly reminded of its omnipotence, and learnt that it had nothing to do but to enact that he should not exist. Mr. Disraeli felt the relief as much as anyone, and with characteristic boldness of assertion, and with that contempt for his party which make them admire and follow him so blindly, instantly announced that this was exactly what he had been longing for. He had from the outset hoped to get rid of the compound householder, but believed that this was too great, too complete, a good fortune to aim at. Only out of sheer modesty, and from a humble wish not to be wiser than the House, had he concealed the dearest longing of his soul. He asked for a little time to see how the abolition of the compound householder could best be managed, but that he should be abolished was a certainty. But Mr. Disraeli is always a little in advance of his party. He has, to borrow Mr. Lowe's metaphor, to lead them gently up to anything they dislike, and let them look at it and learn not to shy at it. The abolition of the compound householder was like a perambulator or a milestone, at which even such good willing animals might be expected to shy a little. Even after their leader had promised that the compound householder should be abolished, the Conservative lawyers began to think that it was hard to see how this could be done. The first task which Mr. Disraeli had to achieve was to have this abolition effected by clauses in the Bill itself, and not by a separate Act. It is so hard to get rid of the compound householder that, if Parliament once begins to consider how he should die, he will live on. The only way is to kill him straight off. It may give a very great deal of trouble to parochial authorities; it may make individuals uneasy; it may interfere with the calculations to landlords and tenants; but if it is enacted that from the passing of the Act, or within a few months afterwards, none but occupiers shall be rated in Parliamentary boroughs, somehow or other things will settle themselves. It may be curious and unreasonable that a system of collecting rates which some men, like Mr. Gladstone, think a triumph of civilization, and which others, like Mr. Henley, consider a device of old Nick, should be swept away without a thought whether it is in itself good or bad, and only because its extinction is convenient for the purposes of the Reform Bill; but the Reform Bill and the compound householder cannot exist together, and the minds of men are now occupied with the one thought of passing the Reform Bill.

But although Mr. Disraeli has undertaken to abolish the compound householder, and has hit on the right mode of despatching him, he has not been able to kill him in the neat and artistic way which we may be sure he would have preferred. He wants a little help from the House before he has quite done his work. In the clauses which have been framed on behalf of the Government, some one has managed to stick in a provision which would not only keep the compound householder alive, but would keep him alive in his most obnoxious form. One of the proposed clauses enacts that the landlord and the tenant may agree that the tenant shall not pay the rates, but that the landlord shall pay them, and that then the tenant shall have no vote, and the landlord shall only pay the compound instead of the full rate. This was not the happy thought of Mr. Hodgkinson; this was not what drove Mr. Bass into ecstacies. This is not at all the settlement of the borough franchise which has been making every one feel moderately comfortable, even under the icy winds of an English May. No arrangement, indeed, could possibly be worse. The landlord would have the strongest pecuniary inducement to keep his tenant off the register. Every tenant who chose to vote would cost the man in whose house he lives, the man who can turn him and his family and his furniture into the street, threepence on every shilling of rate. The pressure of landlords on tenants would be much more severe than it would have been as the Reform Bill stood before Mr. Hodgkinson's name was known to fame. Every tenant would commence his tenancy with a fixed agreement that he was not to register himself. And while the Reform Bill would be utterly spoilt by this provision, municipalities would be put to an inconvenience from which they are now exempt. They would have to ascertain, in boroughs where the Small Tenements Act has been adopted, whether individuals have or have not made a bargain, and the only way in which this inconvenience could be avoided would be by the landlord making it to be understood that he might always be relied on, and that no man self-willed enough to be a voter should ever cross the threshold of a house belonging to him. There would still be the difference between one borough and another which has been made the subject of such bitter complaint. Mr. Bright would still be uncertain of how many of his thirty-six thousand possible electors he is to be robbed. Mr. Roebuck would still be rich in the absolute certainty that twenty-eight thousand new electors would exist to support him in his bold views on Ireland. All this must be as obvious to Mr. Disraeli as to every one else; but some of the faithful creatures he is managing want to have two looks at the mile-stone. They like to shy a little, if it were only in memory of the days when they ran wild and untrained on the free heights of Toryism. The House will know how to accommodate him, and will strike this absurd clause out for him, and then he will bow to the will of Parliament, and the mile-stone will be safely passed and everybody will be happy.

Mr. Disraeli appears to be resolved to press on the Bill with all possible speed. He has proposed to give two morning sittings to it in the week, and to have these morning sittings at a time of the day when it will be convenient for members to attend. On Tuesdays and Fridays the House will go on with the Reform Bill from two to seven, and it is to be hoped that the morning sittings on these days will be devoted exclusively to the Reform Bill, and that the discussion of no other measure will be suffered to intrude on them. The Government has thus disposed of the rumour that it was intended to propose to defer the redistribution of seats till another year; and although they do not deserve much credit for abstaining from a course that would have been in every way discreditable to them, still it ought to be acknowledged that they have shown a sincere desire to push their Bill on, and to avoid that delay by which some of the small intriguers of their party think they might profit. But even with the utmost disposition on the part of the Government to get such a Bill forward, it is necessarily very slow work. Sometimes very important questions take a very simple shape, and then a settlement is easily and quickly attained. It is proposed, for example, that the qualification for copyholders and long leaseholders in counties shall be 5l. instead of 10l. It is a question of one figure against another, and when a vote is taken, the figure selected by the majority prevails. But minor matters may often come before the House in a very complicated form, and it may be very difficult to say which of two views ought to prevail. On Thursday night a majority of three in a tolerably full House decided that certain words in a clause as drawn by the Government should be omitted and then another majority of three decided that the words proposed to be substituted should not be inserted. The clause was thus left in a skeleton state, and the House abruptly closed the debate by insisting that the Government should take time to consider how the void should be filled up. It was but a small point on which this difference of opinion was shown, and the view of either side might easily find arguments to justify it. The question was, whether the occupation giving the new county qualification must include a tenement or not. On the one side it was urged that the granting of short leases of land without buildings was a very easy way of manufacturing votes. A landlord could arrange that a number of persons should be qualified, although one tenant was really responsible for the cultivation of the land. On the other hand, it was urged that no such restriction is imposed on the occupier under the present law, and that it would be unjust to treat the poorer occupier more hardly than his richer neighbour. The squires liked to have this power of manufacturing votes in their hands, and they became very excited, and the House adjourned quite as much to give them an opportunity of calming themselves down as for any other reason. This keen little squabble shows plainly enough how fierce, how protracted, and how warm will be the contests raised at every step of the clauses providing for the redistribution of seats. It will take many wearisome morning sittings to effect a settlement of clauses in which so many members have such a storng personal interest. Every exertion must therefore be made to get the Bill forward, and if the abolished compound householder is once more to revive and once more to be killed, the prospect is alarming. Let us hope that he may be formally extermined with as little delay and as little warmth of debate as possible.

The Spiritual Philosophy.

"No idea," rejoins the believer in a spiritual philosophy, "could be more shallow. Your logic is utterly futile: I refuse to put my trust in your puny deductive and inductive machinery. Your pretty system of inference breaks down when it goes beyond a certain narrow range of things that you can grasp, see, count up, and put into your pocket. Why, your logicians can't agree about a simple political problem, such as the question on what my right to the ownership of this walking-stick is based; whether that right has its root in the nature of things, as the logical M. Thiers maintains; or whether it is purely the creature of law, as the logical Mr. Bentham contends. You can't agree about the conclusion, for the simple reason that you do not and cannot agree about the premises. In spite of yourselves, you all take for granted something that ought to be proved; something that education or temperament has taught you to regard as indisputable. Unconsciously you assume this or that; then you build up a brave induction; or apply a beautifully precise syllogism, and your results differ from each other, just as much as the colour of your hair or the shade of your complexion! If you would give me some guide to a man's religious, political, or philosophical opinions, don't tell me he is a capital reasoner; tell me who were his father and mother, whether he has had the measles, what is the girth of his chest, whether his digestion is good, whether he stoops or carries his head erect, whether he is modest or self-conceited, whether he is married or single, whether he is fonder of claret than of milk punch, whether he thinks Plato or Aristotle the bigger man. If logical inference thus errs in dealing with every-day matters, how can we take her as a guide when we come to that mystery of mysteries—a Supreme Maker, a living principle independent of matter, a life, of which death is but the birth? Were we to do that, we should, according to our friends the positivists, have to call the best men who ever appeared on this earth mistaken if well-meaning fanatics, and to smile at the beliefs which have cheered the grandest and devoutest of our race in the midst of sorrow and of death. Nay, we should have to say that the half of our nature is a life. We should have to say that we had been dowered with religious instincts which point to ends that have no existence; which delude us with promises that shall never be fulfilled; which speak of an Almighty Father who reigns over all things, while in reality there reigns over all things only an Almighty Force; which whisper that after death there comes everlasting life, while in reality there comes but everlasting sleep. Let positivism be true, and our existence loses half its beauty, sentiment is dead, poetry is banished by science, arithmetic takes the place of religion, and the world becomes so frightfully dull that we must all take to hard drinking to keep ourselves awake. No, positivism will not do. It may find fault if it pleases with the form of Buddhism, Mahometanism, and Christianity. We admit that religious forms must decay, but the spirit that animates them lives for ever, and age by age is giving man clearer and clearer hints of the life which is veiled by the gross covering of material things. Some generations may doubt that great truth: it needs also a clear atmosphere. And just as the bodily eye sees farther on some days than on others, so, in some ages, the intellectual eye pierces deeper than in others into the sphere of religions and philosophies.—Fraser's Magazine.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Monday Evening.

This has been rather a quiet day in the Opium market. A moderate business has been done in New Patna, but rates show no change from the last closing price given of $650. A few small speculators have been trying to bear the market down; scrips of $650 being offered at $10 bargain each chest, and $655 at $5 bargain. Seventh Sales of $660 at $10 bargain. There has been an improved feeling on the part of the Chinese to operate in Benares, and sales to some extent have been made both to Chinese and foreigners at $628¾ to $631¼, at which the market closes rather weak. Old Benares is nominally quoted at $610 to $612½, and old Patna $620. The stock of these is small and in a few hands, and it is hardly possible to give any true quotations at present. Malwa is in fair Chinese demand at $750. The market for manufactured Imports remains quiet and without any specially new feature to report. Prices are well maintained at their former level, although for the time being quite nominal. There has been some demand for Woollens, and a sale of Grey Shirtings is noted. Transactions reported to-day embrace 50 pieces Assorted Long Ells at $8.60, 300 pieces Assorted Blankets at $6.65, 120 pieces S.S. Assorted Camlets at $18.75, 4,000 pieces 7lbs. Grey Shirtings, at $3.10, 225 bales Bombay Cotton at $21.50 to $22, and 150 bales Bengal at $19.00, 8,000 bundles Nail Rod Iron to arrive at $3.45 and 1,200 bundles at $3.40, and 100 boxes Tin Plates to arrive at $7.20. The movement in Produce embraces 200 bags of Sugar at $6.45, 300 piculs Siam Rice at $1.79, 200 piculs Green Peas at $2.32, 200 bags small Peas at $2.35, 100 bales Vermicelli at $7.40, and 500 piculs Sapanwood at $1.43 to $1.48. There is no change in Shares, the market being dull and without movement.

LEA AND PERRINGS' celebrated WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE declared by connoisseurs to be the only good Sauce.
Caution against Fraud. The success of this most delicious and unrivalled Condiment having caused certain dealers to apply the name of "Worcestershire Sauce" to their own inferior compounds, the Public is hereby informed that the only way to secure the genuine, is to ASK FOR LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE, and to see that their names are upon the wrapper, labels, stopper, and bottle.
Some of the foreign markets having been supplied with a spurious Worcestershire Sauce, upon the wrapper and labels of which the names of Lea and Perrins have been forged, L. and P. give notice that they have furnished their correspondents with power of attorney to take instant proceedings against Manufacturers and Vendors of such, or any other imitations by which their right may be infringed.
Ask for LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE, and see Name on Wrapper, Label, Bottle, and Stopper.

WITH reference to the advertisement of Messrs. PRATT & ROBERTS, dated New York, June, 1856, and inserted in the Daily Press, of January 1867, stating that Mr. PRATT is the only person legally entitled to use, in packing BUTTER, the brand "H. L. SILL."
In reply to said advertisement, we would merely call attention to the following Circular, which we consider will be sufficient to show the Public who are the properly authorised parties entitled to use the BRAND referred to:—
NEW YORK, May 1st, 1856.
The Co-partnership existing between C. H. PRATT and Myself having expired by its own limitation, I have this day formed a limited partnership with THOS. B. HARRIS and NATHAN G. POND, under the firm of HARRIS & POND.
Mr. POND has been in my employ for the last eight years, and is alone authorised to use my Brand for
for the China, California, and other markets.
I can with confidence recommend them to my friends and the public as worthy of their patronage. HORACE L. SILL.
The undersigned having this day formed a limited partnership with JOHN SAXTON and HORACE L. SILL, for the transaction of the SHIPS STORES AND CHANDLERY BUSINESS, would beg leave to call your attention to the above notice, and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage.

Extracts.

Old Stories Re-Told.

(From "All the Year Round.")

Mr. Richard Turpin rode many miles from the time he left the cradle till he reached the gibbet, but he never rode from London to York, nor, in fact, did any one ever accomplish that extraordinary ride. The myth is, however, founded on a real incident. In 1676, one Nicks, a robber haunting the road between Chatham and London to rob sailors returning to town with their pay, and Kentish traders on their way to London, plundered a traveller at four o'clock in the morning on the slope of Gadshill, the spot immortalised by Shakespeare, and for ever associated with Falstaff's delightful poltroonery. Being on a blood mare, a splendid bay, Nicks determined to prove an alibi in case of danger. He rode off straight to Gravesend; there determined in hour for a boat, he prudently baited his horse; then crossing the water, he dashed across Essex, full fifty to Chelmsford, rested half an hour, and gave his horse some balls. Then he mounted and flashed on to Bramborough, Bocking, and Wetherfield, fast across the downs to Cambridge; quick by by-roads and across country, he slipped past Godmanchester and Huntingdon to Fenny Stratford, where he baited the good mare and took a quick half hour's sleep. Then once more along the north road till the cathedral grew up over the horizon larger—larger, and whiz—he darted through York gate. In a moment he had led the jaded mare into an inn stable, spanned up some food, tossed off some generous life-giving wine, and in a fresh dress—say green velvet and gold lace—strolled out, gay and calm, to the Boyting-green, then full of company. The lord mayor of the city happening to be there, Nicks sauntered up to him, and asked him the hour. "A quarter to eight." "Your most obedient." When Nicks was apprehended and tried for the Gadshill robbery, the prosecutor swore to the man, the place, and the hour; but Nicks brought the lord mayor of York to prove an alibi, and the jury disbelieving in Sir Boyle Roach's bird anywhere out of Ireland, acquitted the resolute and sagacious thief.

Nevertheless, Richard Turpin's career is not uninteresting, as he was a tolerably fair type of the highwayman of George the Second's time, although there was nothing especially gallant or chivalrous about the rascal. His career shows the sort of people from whom the highwaymen obtained their recruits, the light in which society regarded them, and the inevitable ride up Holborn-hill to Tyburn-tree, to which two-thirds of them came after a short career of alternate beggary and riot.

Richard Turpin was the son of the landlord of the Bell at Hempstead, in Essex, who bound him apprentice to a Whitechapel butcher. Having served his time, Turpin set up as a butcher in Essex, on the economical principle of stealing all the cattle he sold. Being at last detected, he joined some associates in the hundreds of Essex; but finding this mode of life too precarious, the ex-butcher headed a gang of deerstealers which infested Epping Forest. Deerstealing growing dangerous, Turpin and his men took to burglary, beginning by getting four hundred pounds from an old woman at Loughton, under threat of roasting her on the grate. At Rippleside, alas! they broke into a house, blindfolded the farmer and his family, and secured eighty pounds each. "That'll do," said Turpin; and getting bolder now, the gang (in Turpin's absence) resolved to attack various persons who had attempted to bother them. Four of them broke into the house of Mason, a forest-keeper, killed Mason, threw him under a dresser, drove the women naked into the farmyard, broke everything in the house, and were lucky enough to see a hundred and twenty guineas stream from an old punch-bowl that they wantonly smashed. Six of them next broke into the house of Mr. Saunders, a rich farmer at Charlton, in Kent. They bound the farmer's friends, who were at cards, and then forced Saunders to go with them and open all his boxes, closets, and escritoires, till they had obtained a hundred pounds in money and all the plate. They drank a bottle of wine, ate some mince-pies, and forced the fattered prisoners to take some brandy. They then packed up the booty, and made off, threatening to return and murder all the family if they dared to move outside the house for two hours, or if they ventured to advertise the marks on the plate. This robbery was planned at Woolwich. After effecting it, the robbers crossed the water to an empty house in Rebuilt-highway, and there quietly divided their spoil. They now got so daring and reckless that, as early as seven o'clock one January evening in 1733, they forced their way into the house of a Mr. Lawrence, at Edgeware. They only obtained about thirty pounds, but threatened to burn the farmer alive if he did not discover where his money was hid. A reward of fifty pounds for their apprehension had an effect in alarming Turpin's gang; for the next month they broke into the house of Mr. Francis, a farmer, near Marylebone, and stole thirty-seven pounds, some rings, diamonds, and a silver tankard. The women were bound and guarded by one of the band, while Turpin and another, with loaded pistols, stood over the men, who were tied up in the stable.

Kent, Essex, and Middlesex were now in arms; for no one seemed safe, and the pottering old constables, and the fussy and still more imbecile county magistrates, were powerless. Mr. Thompson, one of the king's park-keepers, having, however, got a promise from the Duke of Newcastle for payment of one hundred pounds for the apprehension of Turpin or any of his colleagues, the thieves began to grow more wary. One night, as Turpin and three others were carousing in an alehouse in an alley at Westminster, the constables burst in and seized three of the robbers, but Turpin leaped through a window and escaped. These men were eventually hung in chains very soon after.

Turpin, finding that nearly all his old friends were given to the crows, new set off for Cambridgeshire. On his way, he stopped a well-dressed man, and threatened to blow out his brains because he hastened him, and was not quick enough in handing out his purse.

"What! dog eat dog?" said the man. "If you don't know me better, Mr. Turpin, I know you, and shall be glad of your company."

It proved to be King, a notorious highwayman, who at once entered into partnership with Turpin in all his robberies. As no landlord, however rascally, would now entertain these rough-riders, the two men dug a cave, hidden by brambles, hazels, and thorns, near the high road between King's Oak and Laughton-road. The cave, large enough to hold both them and their horses, was well situated for reconnoitring. Turpin's wife supplied them with food.

They one night stopped a Mr. Bradele, and their treatment of him is characteristic of highwaymen's etiquette. Mr. Bradele gave up his money readily, but was loth to part with his watch, till his little girl cried, and begged him to surrender it. King then insisted on having an old valueless mourning-ring, but seeing Mr. Bradele prized it, he said he and his pal were too much of gentlemen to deprive him of anything he valued so much. Mr. Bradele then offered to leave six guineas at the bar of the Dial, in Birchin-lane, and, to ask no questions, if he might keep his watch and his ring. King accented the offer.

Soon after this a servant of Mr. Thompson, the park-keeper, and a daring higgler set out to trap Turpin in his cave. Turpin took them for poachers, till the servant presented his gun, and called on the highwayman to surrender. Turpin gradually retreated to his cave, took up his loaded carbine, and shot the too-venturous servant dead. The other then ran off. Turpin soon after was nearly surprised at an inn at Hertford, and then made for London, through the forest. Finding his horse tire, he stopped Mr. Major, owner of the famous racer White Stockings, changed horses, and dashed off to London. Mr. Major confiding his loss to Mr. Boys, landlord of the Green Man at Epping, Mr. Boys took it very much to heart, and devoted his time to discovering Turpin's lair. He at last found Mr. Major's horse at the Red Lion Inn, in Whitechapel. He seized the man who came to fetch it, who proved to be King's brother, and who confessed that a tall hairy man in a white duffel coat was then waiting for it in Red Lion-street. Mr. Boys going out, and seeing it was King the highwayman, instantly attacked him. King drew a pistol and fleshed it at Boys's breast, but it missed fire, and his second pistol got entangled in his pocket. Just then Turpin dashed up, and King shouted:

"Dick, shoot him, or we're taken, by ——"

Turpin instantly fired, missed Mr. Boys and shot his friend, who died a few days afterwards. King taxed Turpin with cowardice and treachery, and betrayed his hand in Rackneymarsh to Mr. Boys; but advised him to be cautious as Turpin usually carried three brace of pistols, and had a carbine slung at his back.

Turpin's haunts being now known, the not very chivalrous scoundrel stole off to Lincolnshire, where he lived by sheep, and horse stealing, and by raids into Yorkshire, hiding at Minchet Cave, North Cave, and Welton, and often riding back to Long Sutton, Lincolnshire, with a string of stolen horses, which he sold, without exciting much suspicion. Our most romantic reader will have observed the utter want of true courage and gallantry in this man's whole career. Never fighting against odds or his own conscience, always intent on the guineas, and taking care to be superior in force to the traveller he stopped; cruel to unarmed farmers, he was a mere mounted thief, and nothing else. In the first real dangerous scuffle he loses his head, and shoots his old companion, either by treachery or mistake. Burglar, sheep-stealer, horse-stealer, smuggler, his hands were now red with murder, and the whole country was up against him. No more travels in Westminster lanes, Blood Bowl-alley, or Thieving-lane; no more selling plate to Jew receivers. The thief-takers were on his heels.

Turpin's blustering insolence and cruelty led at last to his betrayal. Returning one day from shooting at Long Sutton, he wantonly and in cold blood shot one of his neighbour's fowls, and threatened to blow out the brains of a friend who remonstrated. He was instantly apprehended, at once discovered to be the famous horse-stealer and highwayman, and was sent off in chains to York Castle. The farmers crowded to the prison to identify their ruthless spoiler, and he became one of the shows of the ancient city. Nothing, however, daunted him; he spent his time joking, drinking, and telling stories, and was "as jovial, merry, and frolicsome, as if he was quite at liberty and insured for a good hundred years of life." He scoffed at the chaplain, and expressed no remorse for any of his thousand and one villainies.

His vanity was chiefly busy in preparing for the last scene, and he bought a new fustian frock and a pair of pumps to take his leave of the world respectably. The morning before his execution he gave three pounds ten shillings among five men, who were to follow the cart as mourners, and to purchase black hatbands and gloves for several more. He also left a gold ring and two pairs of shoes to one of his mistresses, who lived at Brough. John Stead, a horse-stealer, was his companion in the cart; but all eyes were turned on Turpin as he bowed to the ladies, and waved his cocked-hat with the courage and effrontery of his class. After he mounted the ladder, he talked half an hour with the hangman, then threw himself resolutely off, and died in a moment.

He was only thirty-three, but in that time he had crammed as much mischief as a man well could. His body lay in state all that day at the Blue Boar at Castle-gate, and the next morning was buried in St. George's churchyard within Fishergate-postern. The next evening the surgeons dug up the body for dissection, and removed it to a garden. The mob, with a sympathy so often misplaced, was furious, and carried the corpse on a board covered with straw in triumph through the streets of York; they then strewed the coffin with lime, replaced the body, and interred it in the old place.

The Financial Storm and Panic.

It came steadily but surely, gently at first, like great storms come, with a gradual lowering of the clouds and a gradual increase in the wind. It began in a calm—a quiet, happy, pleasant calm—a clam that may be typified by a man seated on the lawn at Barton, and smoking in the shade, with sheep bleating at a distance. It came out of a calm, we say—a delightful time of rising markets, when the bulls of the Stock Exchange were in clover and the bears at fault. It began when most kinds of shares were at a premium; when all sorts of companies were paying big dividends, and £5 shares were selling at £8 and £10; when everything was "looking up;" when men bought to invest, and even bought one day to sell the next at a profit. First, there was a whisper from the Continent which agitated the financial atmosphere for a moment—the first breeze of the coming storm. The bears sniffed it, but the bulls feared it not, and shares for a moment wavered, only to recover and make the calm seem all the more assuring. Then a whisper came from the New World, and there was an Atlantic roughness about it at which the bears opened their nostrils and sniffed with a hungry relish. The bulls wavered still in doubt, and then in a sudden darkness the big clouds gathered, and the wind blew a hurricane—blew tempestuously from the shores of France, with tributary winds from Austria and Prussia, and loud winds from St. Stephen's. Then the bears growled and frisked and bit and bellowed, and the bulls fought hard and butted with their horns; but the bears tore and lacerated them: for the financial storm had come, and there was panic everywhere. The Genii of Finance no longer in the sun looked listless and fearful, and the magicians who had hitherto controlled them had lost their power, because the world had faith in them no longer. The story is not new; it crops up afresh once in about every eight or ten years. Meanwhile, the storm in the city was raging, and spreading far away to all points of the compass. Though the moon shone forth calmly on Cornhill and Lombard-street, on Threadneedle-street and on the Stock Exchange, through all the night the storm raged in men's hearts; it tossed men and women on their beds, and shook giants of finance where they lay sleepless and afeard; it tore along the railways, scaled up in letters, which carried the tempest to Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield, Bristol, Birmingham, and even to the cathedral city where Mr Phillips resided. They were like so many Pandora's boxes, these letters from the City the next morning, letting out on being opened evils without end. Despair and ruin were in many of them, and all the country was agitated with fear. If an invading host had been sailing up the Thames, the consternation would not have been so great; for the people could have gone forth and done battle with the foe. But there is no fighting a financial storm—no contending with Stock Exchange terrors. After the peril, val of Pandora's letters, there went forth into the country flights of telegrams, electric pigeons which settled in crowds with their missives in all the towns of England, and the storm increased tenfold with the excitement of the electric current. During the morning hundreds of bulls put on their clothing, and the shares of Overton, Baker, and Co. began to fall, and in the afternoon the leading discount-house in the country gave way to the pressure: and the then fresh flights of electric pigeons went forth into the towns that Overton, Baker, and Co. had failed for ten million of money.—The Tallants of Barton: A Novel.
